

Abstract

The present invention is a method and system for selecting clinical trial candidates. Medical records are obtained from a source of patient clinical data, and are searched by a clinical trial candidate identification service for suitability for a particular clinical trial. The privacy of patients whose medical records are searched is preserved by replacing the identity of the patient with a secure patient code before the records are released to the clinical trial candidate identification service.